In the Wake of the News

By Ring W. Lardner

A wireless from the second floor: "Mudder, come here! Bim's finger's sore."

My child, your mudder's not a dunce; That bait won't catch her more than once.

She knows you really mean that "Bim" Just wants her there to talk to him; Just wants her in his room to keep him company, till he's asleep.

It worked the first time, I'll admit; Both of your parents fell for it. They believed the appealing words you said. And rushed, excited, to your bed To find they'd been deceived by you.

"Mudder, come here! Bim's finger's sore." Forget it, "Bim"! We'll fall no more.

For All Pain

"The efficiency of any drug," says Dr. C. P. Robbins, "is known to us by the results we obtain from its use. If we are able to control pain and disease by means of any preparation, we certainly are warranted in its use. One of the principal symptoms of all diseases is pain, and this is what the patient most often applies to us for, i. e., something to relieve his pain. If we can arrest the pain promptly the patient is most liable to trust us for the other remedies which will effect a permanent cure. One remedy which I have used largely in my practice is anti-kamnia tablets. Many and varied are their uses. I have put them to the test on many occasions, and have never been disappointed. I found them especially valuable for headache of malarial origin, where quinine was being taken. They appear to prevent the bad after-effects of the quinine. Anti-kamnia tablets are also excellent for pain at certain times. Two anti-kamnia tablets give prompt relief, and in a short time the patient is able to go about as usual." These tablets may be obtained at all druggists. Ask for A-K Tablets. They are also collected for headaches, neuralgia and all pain.

SECRETARY REED'S REPORT FOR APRIL

The net gain for the month was forty-eight.

Jealousy Natural Emotion The Sign of Great Love

It Marks Difference with the Sexes, but No Person is Immune Says the Judge

By Frank P. Niemann, County Judge Nassau County, New York.

A recent ruling of mine, whereby I refused to send a man to an insane asylum, caused a great deal of discussion, not because of the importance of the single case, but because of my assertion that if every jealous man were sent to an insane asylum we would have to build a double row of mad houses the length of the island. I repeat that assertion.

It was not a welcome statement to men, because they have always posed as being without the taint of jealousy. The fault has been imputed to women and regarded as a purely feminine failing. The truth is there are as many jealous men as women.

A young woman came before me to ask that her husband be sent to the Kings County Insane Asylum. She testified that he had threatened to kill her. I learned that she had taken their children and gone back to Europe, leaving them with her parents, and that when she returned she seemed to have lost interest in her husband and drifted away from him. He had begged her to come back to him and had even, in a frenzy of jealousy, threatened her life. I decided against the wife because I do not regard jealousy as a dangerous form of insanity.

Crimes Committed in Its Name. In common phrases we often find uncommon wisdom. The phrase, "Insanely jealous," is one of these. It refers to the temporary, wild mood of a person suffering from the pangs of unrequited affection and fearing to lose the object of his love to another. But it does not include the element of danger. Great unhappiness, yes; but not danger to its object.

I am aware that great crimes have been committed in the name of jealousy. I know that murders have been committed by that passion, yet I insist that the fault was more particularly that of the person who had caused the jealousy. Patience, kindness, understanding, sympathy are the antidotes. Murders caused by jealousy have, almost without exception, followed the taunts or the open infidelity or the cruel indifference of the person who was the cause.

The large majority of cases of extreme jealousy have a sufficient cause. While there are persons who are born with a strongly jealous nature, as they are born with dark hair or fair complexion, those cases are a very small percentage of the number of sufferers from the affliction. While it is true that a few persons are vaguely jealous, without a definite reason, they're so few as to be negligible and the cases are scarcely normal.

Any truly human being will be jealous with cause, or what that person conceives to be cause. Nine-tenths of all persons have been or will be jealous. The remaining one-tenth are not so because they are below par in the matter of feeling. They are persons without sentiment, and the person without sentiment is less than human.

Manifestations Differ with Sex. Many persons have brought their tangled affairs before me, and I have unraveled the tangle only to find suspicious matchfulness the central knot. The manifestations of jealousy differ with sex. Men are ashamed of their jealousy. Women are not. The reason is found in the attitude the world has taken toward the tormenting passion. Men think it is unmanly to be jealous. Women do not think it is unmanly. Therefore if you ask a man if he is jealous he will answer, "No," although every act of his in the legal tangle that has brought him into my presence proves the contrary. On the other hand, a woman will admit it without quibbling. The man masks his face in cold reserve and no one knows of his torments save the woman who has occasioned them. But the woman has no such reserve. She treats the matter with absolute candor. While I have not observed a jealous face, I have noted in women a jealous attitude. The posture of the woman who is testifying of her jealousy is that of a soldier bravely squared for battle. Her shoulders are high and straight. Her head is held aloft. Her chin is tilted upward. A passionate sense of justice outraged by her wrongs carries her gallantly through the ordeal.

Man Looks to Past, Woman to Future. The nature of jealousy differs somewhat in the two sexes. Man is liable to be retrospectively jealous. Woman does not in this instance look back. But she reckons carefully with the present and future.

My observations of many cases of jealousy with the general opinion of such cases, I have not found that that poet is right who said it is "cruel as the grave." More true are the lines, "To be wroth with one we love doth work like madness on the brain."

"Like madness," you note, but the poet does not say that it is madness. The common attitude toward jealousy is that it is a contemptible emotion, and that the person who entertains it is petty and should be harshly disciplined for his or her fault. With this popular proposition I earnestly disagree. Jealousy is not an ignominious passion. The person who entertains it does not deserve contempt. Harsh measures are the wrong weapon.

BEWITCHING HAIR FOR EVERY WOMAN

Hair That Radiates Healthfulness Always Compels Admiration.

Don't neglect your hair, girls; you'll be sorry later on if you do. Never mind about the things you have tried; never mind what people say.

Just remember this: Parisian Sage will make harsh, thin or faded hair soft, glossy and luxuriant. It quickly rids the scalp of dandruff, stops falling hair and scalp itch, and imparts that refreshing comfortable feeling or money returned.

It's a delicately perfumed liquid free from oiliness and as one woman remarked, "Parisian Sage puts the radiance of sunshine into my dull looking hair and makes it beautiful and luxuriant." Wells & Haymaker Co. sell lots of it and always guarantee it.—Advertisement.

ons with which to combat it.

I believe that jealousy is the mark of a great love. Mighty objects cast huge shadows. It is the sign of a great character. Only a great character has the capacity of great love.

Jealousy Not Insult to Its Object. I am at variance with the common conception of the great torment when I say that jealousy is not an insult to its object. It does not necessarily argue distrust of the person. It argues, rather, distrust of one's own power to hold the affection of the one beloved. That is not a weakness, but a commendable modesty.

Some of the soundest, finest, biggest natures I have ever known suffered from jealousy. They were men or women without vanity. The vain person is rarely jealous. He or she is too absolutely sure of his or her own attractions to question their power.

What is the cure for it? Patience! Patience! And again patience! If you have caused any suffering through that emotion, treat it as you would any pathological state. Remove the cause. If the person has imagined a cause, the suffering is as real to him as though it existed. Patiently convince that person that he is in error. It cannot be done at once, but by kindly persistence the germ can be eliminated from the mind.

If you yourself suffer from jealousy, there is a remedy which Ovid suggested. "Dwell upon her faults and magnify them." That is an unjust course, provided your jealousy is groundless. But if it has actual reason for existence there is no better cure for the gnawing of the green-eyed monster.

Intense Anguish or Soul Involved.

Was Ruskin jealous, think you, before he gave his wife to his friend the painter? I can conceive that he was, with the torments of a thousand whips of flame. But eventually, knowing his own love for her to be hopeless, he made the renunciation that gave two of the most beautiful chances for happiness in Boston a woman intellectual of true nobility of character, made the same sacrifice. But not, you may be sure, without previous anguish of soul.

In such remarkable instances it is wrong to assume that jealousy disappears, the sacrifice accomplished. Jealousy recurs, but its outward manifestations are less vivid. The sense of balance is slowly restored. When the sundering of the ties is final, when hope perishes, the sanest cure is substitution of some new interest for the old. Neglected wives have found surcease of their sorrows in charities. Deserted husbands have plunged into business or profession with ferocious energy. Little by little the balm of forgetfulness lessens the pain.

Summon all the patience in you to treat jealousy. Remember trifles light as air" to the jealous are confirmation strong as Holy Writ. Never despise the jealous man or woman, for tomorrow you yourself may be jealous. If you are the object of jealousy, be gentle, else you may be overwhelmed and crushed by it.
